Why Are the Walls Empty?

Join us on February 16th at 7:30 p.m. at 700 Hartford Turnpike in Hamden to take up the question: Can Humanism fall in love with art, or why are the walls empty?

The pros and cons of this possibility will be bounced back and forth by an eager panel of diverse persuasion. With the moderation of Nick Orsini to keep the participants from engaging in political excesses the panel will comprise these distinguished combatants: David Schafer, a long time and resilient debater; Walter Wells, our artistic guru whose experience and knowledge baffles us all; Bill Goward, whose rationality we rely on; and professor Charles Wieder a quiet but not to be undermined philosopher, a wanderer from the academic world and new to our shores with a penetrating grasp of the issue.

The aforementioned moderator, Nick Orsini, will set the scene and will step back to observe the spark.

This exciting event will take place at 700 Hartford Turnpike in Hamden on February 16th, starting with coffee and goodies at 7:30 p.m. and the presentation at 8:00 p.m. Bring a friend!

Book Discussion April 10

Terror in the Name of God:

Why Religious Militants Kill by Jessica Stern

Doug Peary and Gabriella Brand have been kind enough to open their home at 63 Forest Hill Road in North Haven on Saturday, April 10 at 2:30 p.m. for this book discussion. Directions will be in the March newsletter.

Even though Jessica Stern teaches at Harvard and specializes in this subject, the book is easy to read and well-received both in and out of academia by people of diverse political viewpoints. You have nearly two months to get the book and read it. We look forward to seeing you there!
